

I rise in opposition to any attempt to weaken the Indiana no-call list. Many of these banks house investment firms that can use this exemption to solicit investment opportunities and any other "services" within their business models.

These banks can call their customers for legitimate "account" concerns and transactions but should not be given free reign to call and solicit for services that the customer has not 'subscribed' to or holds an interest in thereof.

Do not fix that which is not broken. If customers wanted these types of 'calls' we would ask for the exemption. Given that the customer base is not asking for such, please do not allow such.
